Faculty Tech Bytes Continues this Fall

Thank you to everyone who completed last months brief survey regarding the Fall 2015 Faculty Tech Bytes series. Your input is informing the planning upcoming sessions. We anticipate having a finalized schedule available for the August Instructional Design Newsletter.

Information regarding previous Faculty Tech Bytes sessions is available online at: http://blogs.shu.edu/technology/faculty-tech-bytes/

Online Learning Corner

Whether you are thinking of developing an online course for the first time or have completed one before, the Teaching, Learning, Technology Center has resources to make the process a little less daunting.

If you are interested in obtaining these resources or plan the development of an online course, contact your instructional designer.

Makerspace Corner

Do you like to build or create? Are you interested in innovative technologies like 3D printing? Are you looking for ways to inspire creativity with your students? The Seton Hall Makerspace Lib Guide is now available online and combines traditional resources (library books, databases, journals) with online resources (websites, tutorials, digital content), tools (software, equipment) and physical objects to help you get started with your next project.
